Monumental Inscriptions Database List

This database comprises Monumental Inscriptions transcribed from a variety of sources, such as gravestones, plaques, war memorials etc. additional details may have been added from other sources such as the Commonwealth War Graves site in the case of war dead and this information is shown in square brackets []. Note that the presence of a name may not indicate an actual burial but may just be a memorial to people interred elsewhere. Every attempt has been made to transcribe details accurately but due to the condition of some of the stones plus human nature errors can occur.

Sources state what has been transcribed for that location and at what date this was completed. Any Inscriptions added to sites after this date will not therefore have been included, this is something to be aware of especially if a site is still in current use. It is also possible for interments to take place in a 'Closed' burial ground if the family already own a plot.

Many of the Inscriptions were first published several years ago in the Society Record Series or as specific CD's. The Society method of recording has since changed so that now all entries on an inscription are linked together. This may not have been the case in the past. In some cases a photograph of the memorial and a location map may also be available to view.

Where the inscriptions relate to a church it has been stated if these include any inside the church. In many cases they will not as access at the time of transcribing may not have been available. Likewise the location of a War Memorial is also given if this is not at the church or cemetery.

Please Note: Many of the Inscriptions were first published several years ago in the Society Record Series or as specific CD's. The Society method of recording has since changed so that now all entries on an inscription are linked together. This may not have been the case in the past. Recordings held at the Nottinghamshire Archives or given to the Society have also been included in this database. As errors can occur in recording, searches may produce several versions of the same inscription from the different sources.
